

When I grow up I want to be a Nurse. I want to help people that are sick. Nurses help people by making them feel better. Nurses are important because they help people. It doesn't matter if they are young or old rich or poor. Nurses help people with viruses, Cancer and even women having babies. Nurses have knowledge about many things. When I go to college I will have to be a serious student. I will work hard and study.

My mom is a nurse and I want to be just like

my mom.

THE HEALING HOUSE

When I grow up, I want to be an architect because with a college degree in architecture and design, I can pursue my goal. Recently, I spent five days in Children's Hospital with MRSA. While I was there, I saw some very sick children. Designing a hospital floor plan to look more like a home will help take their minds off their illnesses. I believe they will heal faster in this environment. Taking extra classes in math and science will prepare me for this future. Giving back to the place that saved my life is important to me.
